Well done Favour and Ella-Mai for the poems you have written in the creative writing club!

Through the eyes of Fire by Ella-Mai Twomey

I start as a flicker, then build to a flame,
I leap from the candle as they call out my name,
"Put it out" they cry, but I will prevail,
I'll rise from the ashes, and I will not fail.
Through my eyes, I see blood red,
I watch the human's faces fill with sudden dread,
Some of them run, some of them scream,
Some of them watch, oh, this is a dream.
I reach out my hand, and pull myself round,
I look over my shoulder, with barely a sound,
The snapping of wood, buried beneath my feet,
From hazel, to charcoal black, how sweet.
I've scared most of them off, screaming in the night,
Am I really that scary, to give such a fright?
I hear a wailing, quite close, coming from outside,
I creep up to the window, push the curtains aside.
Men rushing over, carrying a huge, long gun,
Now I'm in trouble, so I start to run,
I dash across the stained wooden floor,
I get to the corner as they barge through the door,
They turn on the gun and who do I see?
My enemy, water, chasing after me.
I leap and I bound, to try to bolt out,
But water is too quick, I start to shout.
"Please! I'll be good!" I try to protest,
As I fade away, I think "I did my best"

Through their eyes by Favour Gbadegesin

I fell, blood flowing
My head hurts
Can't stand up
Look at me dead.
Laying on the floor
How pathetic of me
Looking at people passing
No one stopped to help
How vicious the human mind is
How happy I am to die
All the sufferings and pain
I had endured is gone
I don't have to suffer anymore
But wait
What happened to the hope?
And happiness I had waited for
Is this how I am going to die?
I had dreams,
Had hopes for the future
All gone to waste
All my dreams gone
What about my mom?
How is she?
Will she be living well?
I had wanted my mum
To hold my child
I caught a fleeting glimpse of her smiling
But that hope,
That satisfaction of seeing her happy
is gone.
Death came too fast
Can it hold on for a second?
I need to tell my Mum goodbye
I haven't told her I loved her yet
I haven't told her
My plans after graduation
Death please stop
Don't come any closer
I need to cherish my mum
She stills needs to be proud of me.
All my dreams gone
Because of a single mistake
The blood of two people is on your hands
